WELCOME TO THE DC SUMMER FUN 2005 PROGRAM GUIDE

The Government of the District of Columbia and its community partners are proud to present the 2005 city-wide guide that highlights programs and activities for children and youth during the summer. The goal of the DC Summer Fun program (formerly known as the Safe Passages Summer program) is to ensure that the children and youth of the District of Columbia have structured activities during the summer that support learning, education, recreation and health. We want young people across the city to be able to explore new places and ideas while having a fun, safe summer.

In this guide you and your family will be able to locate a range of activities in which children and youth can participate this summer. There is a wide array to choose from: education and reading programs that increase learning over the summer; sports programs that encourage health and fitness while promoting fun; art, dance and other camps to support learning and expand exposure to the arts; and employment programs that assist young people in developing the fundamental skills necessary to achieve their career goals. There are also free summer meals as well as health and mental health services to ensure that our young residents are healthy.

The Government of the District of Columbia, community-based organizations, the foundation community, corporations, and businesses in our city are committed to ensuring that our children and youth have the support they need to become healthy, responsible adults.

We invite you to take full advantage of the many programs and services showcased in this guide.
